"CHAPTER 13"

(A MELODRAMA)

Music by Robt. Fleming.

Setting by John Phillips.

Choreography by Gweneth Lloyd.

Costumes by Dorothy Phillips.

Story by J. Blowe.

The scene is a dark side street in New York on a sultry summer night. A young girl and her artist boy friend and the cop with Nora, who works at Barney's Coffee Shop, are dancing together when the girls from the burlesque house come out of the theatre between shows. Dawn O'Day, the burlesque queen, with Ace, her racketeer lover, make trouble for the young people.

Nora is now off duty for the night and she and the cop dance happily with the girls until they are interrupted by the jealous Ace, who sends his thugs to bump off the young artist. But even Dawn O'Day has a heart which had beaten faster for the unhappy man and she implores Ace to spare his life. In vain she pleads and cajoles, but he slaps her face in fury while the crowd is aghast, and when the gunmen return with the victim, the cop is shot by Ace while trying to save the artist. Nora and the girls mourn the death of Tim. The sailors on leave join the two Puerto Ricans from the dockside in a hunt for the gunmen. Dawn O'Day, furious at the treatment she has received, gives her gun to Nora so that vengeance can be wrought on the gangster by the grief-crazy girl who had loved the dead cop. Ace is enticed to his death by the seductive wiles of Dawn O'Day but Nora, terrified of the possible consequences, died by her own hand before the horrified gaze of her former friends.
